Police on hunt for two armed carjackers

CRIME Police are looking for two suspects after two Drayton Valley men were carjacked at gunpoint early yesterday morning.

Police said the two men were sitting in their minivan in a parking lot near the corner of Highway 22 and 50 Street in Drayton Valley when two unknown men, one of them holding a knife to the passenger through an open window, demanded the victims turn over their vehicle.

A struggle ensued and both victims suffered cuts to their hands, police said. The passenger finally escaped while the driver continued to struggle with the two assailants. One of the attackers was holding a rifle and hit the driver in the head with the butt, causing it to fire in the air. The driver suffered a cut to the head. Both victims were treated and released from hospital and neither of them could help police with descriptions of their attackers.

New Hampshire Tiny stallion

Three-day-old pinto stallion Einstein, born Friday, stands with St. Bernard Hannah yesterday in Barnstead, N.H. The diminutive horse could lay claim to the world record for lightweight foal. The pinto stallion weighed just six pounds and measured 14 inches in height. Those proportions fit a human baby just about right but are downright tiny for a horse, even a miniature breed.

Insider to speak

Jaffer associate to give details on business dealings

A giant dryer that zaps the moisture out of kitchen scraps and even human waste, and transforms it into odourless fuel, seemed like just the type of renewal energy project that Rahim Jaffer and his partner were looking to work with.

But how exactly they handled their interest in the BioDryer technology, and other green projects they were dabbling with, is at the crux of the controversy surrounding the duo's company.

Were they formally pressing the federal government about getting support for the BioDryer and other ideas, or were they simply making general inquiries about a new and complicated funding program?

A would-be business associate of Jaffer's, Nazim Gillani, will weigh in Wednesday about what he knows about Jaffer's business and alleged lobbying.

Lobbying Act

Two important areas of the Lobbying Act are at play. In one section, the act says that if you communicate with public office holders about the "awarding of any grant, contribution, or other financial benefit" by the federal government, you're lobbying. But in another area, the act also says you're not lobbying if you're making general inquiries about the terms of conditions of programs and application processes.

He is expected to tell a House of Commons committee that he believed Jaffer was selling lobbying-type services through his firm, Green Power Generation, and the two were talking about getting their hands into the BioDryer.

According to Jaffer and partner Patrick Glemaud, they had been sending general inquiries about the government's new Green Infrastructure Fund to different public office holders.

When they sent a description of the BioDryer to the offices of the parliamentary secretary to Infrastructure Minister John Baird, along with two other project descriptions, they said it was simply to determine whether the technology fit within the parameters of the new green program. Once they could establish that, they would know whether the project was worth investing their time and money in.

Glemaud emphasized at the Commons government operations committee that the fund required the submission of a letter of interest before getting to the money part. It described how the technology worked and how it fit into the fund's objectives.

ATTACK A 14-year-old has been charged and Edmonton police Chief Mike Boyd has apologized after an attack on a woman on Saturday. Shannon Barry, 31, was assaulted while walking friends near 76 Avenue and 96 Street. The attack left Barry, who is a lesbian, with serious facial injuries and the Hate Crime Unit was brought in to investigate. Investigators concluded that while an assault occurred, it was not determined to be a hate crime. Chief Mike Boyd offered an apology to the victim on Saturday, saying the responding officer took a few days off instead of immediately filing the completed paperwork. METRO EDMONTON

Kobra and the Lotus to charm metal fans

ANDREAS MORSE
for Metro Edmonton

Although she was classically trained for almost a decade, you won't find the lead singer of Kobra and the Lotus listening to Pavarotti or Domingo.

Brittany Paige learned how to sing operatically by going to Kiwanis festivals and pursuing classical music for the better part her young life.

"I don't listen to opera, interestingly enough," said the 21-year-old Calgarian.

"I prefer to listen to piano, I love classical piano."

As a young lady, Paige had aspirations of continuing on with opera music until she discovered hard rock and joined a band.

"I don't find it's a huge crossover at all," she said. "It was just a way to be more myself when I was finding my identity after high school. It was a way to be more myself and sing the way I wanted to at the same time."

Kobra and the Lotus — with Paige on vocals, Chris Swenson and Matt Van Wezel on guitar, Griffin Kissack on drums and Ben Freud on bass — released their first album, Out of the Pit, in March and are coming to the Pawn Shop for some heavy metal mayhem on May 8.

"We've been to Edmonton four times now. The last show we played at the Starlite Room with Striker and that was amazing," Paige said.

"It was pretty much a full house and it was so fun."

After Edmonton, Kobra and the Lotus hit the road on a cross-Canada tour starting May 15 in Toronto.

"It's the coolest thing we've done so far," Paige said. "We're starting there and we're just going to be basically hitting every town and city in Canada. It's pretty extensive."

The tour wraps up at the beginning of September in Tennessee.

147 special-needs kids bound for Disneyland

MIRIAM ITZECK
for Metro Edmonton

TRIP For 147 children from central and northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories, a dream came true when they found out yesterday that they'll spend a day in Disneyland.

More than 200 volunteers from the community and Dreams Take Flight, a national non-profit organization, made it possible for the kids and 100 volunteers to fly to Los Angeles and spend the day with their favourite Disney characters.

Various sponsors, including Air Canada and the Edmonton International Airport, contributed a total of $150,000 to the cause.

The physically, mentally or socially challenged children have been nominated to attend this event by 25 different social agencies across Northern Alberta.

"What we get to do for these kids is fantastic," said Jean Marc Belanger, pilot of the Air Canada Boeing 767, which will be leaving Edmonton for L.A. on May 5. "You can see the change in the kids. At first there is a little disbelief and then by the end of the day it's just magical. It's a wonderful thing."

Belanger is volunteering for the fifth year, and said his plane gets bigger every time.

RCMP to remain in Afghanistan?

The RCMP has started looking at how to continue the police training mission in Afghanistan after the Canadian military pulls out next year, the Mounties' top man said Saturday.

But Commissioner William Elliot noted there are a number of details and variables to be worked out, among them, who would protect and transport the police trainers as they go about their business in the volatile country.

"We're at the beginning of looking at options, but there are a lot more questions than answers at the moment," Elliot said after a visit to Kandahar.

Defence Minister Peter MacKay dropped a broad hint a few weeks ago that Canada's continued involvement here would likely revolve around police training, but he gave few specifics.

Elliot said the RCMP is prepared to carry on, but will need the participation of municipal forces across the country, in the same way it has for other international missions.

"Working with all of the police community in Canada, we'll be able to carry out whatever task the government of Canada gives us in Afghanistan," he said.

There are 48 Canadian police trainers at the joint Canadian and American provincial reconstruction base in Kandahar. But they rely heavily on the Canadian army for protection and movement throughout the city and rural areas.

Roadblocks ahead for LRT expansion

InTransit

Bryan Saunders

metronews.ca/saunders

Too much fanfare, the South LRT extension and Century Park "Park and Ride" officially opened this weekend and the focus is now on city council's plan to keeping the momentum rolling.

Plans are in the works for LRT extensions to NAIT, Mill Woods, Heritage Valley, Gorman, and Lewis Estates. In the case of NAIT, some tracks are already being laid.

It's evident, then, that a lack of ambition is not city council's problem. The problem is money — a lack thereof, more specifically.

With the exception of some one-off stimulus package funding, provincial and federal funding for the LRT have more or less dried up as both levels of government grapple with deficits.

City council recognizes the dilemma emerging before it: At his State of the City address earlier this month, Mayor Stephen Mandel dedicated an incredibly large portion of his speech to the LRT and how to fund it.

One of Mandel's more controversial suggestions was that some of the funding currently earmarked for roadwork could — and perhaps should — be shifted to funding for the LRT.

There are merits to this idea, admittedly, in that expanding roadways has generally been found to make traffic worse; however, even if this type of budgetary shift is pursued, it is still difficult to see how the city will be able to fund further LRT expansions without the financial backing of the provincial and federal governments.

Most of the LRT expansion projects on the books right now have price tags in the area of $1 billion or more. At the same time, the city's entire annual budget — for all departments — is only about $2.5 billion.

Even with the city running a modest $32-million surplus, it's clear that any cost-saving projects and budgetary shifts that Mandel or city council may choose to pursue are peanuts without the monetary support of the province and the feds.

Without a doubt, it is now up to Mandel to negotiate with these higher levels of government for more funding. Hopefully, Mandel is up to the task; if not, it looks like LRT expansion may be slowed to a crawl or — once again — be put on the shelf for several years.

Bryan Saunders is a local transit advocate and a strong supporter of initiatives to decrease dependence on private vehicles.

Film sets are wasteful places, actor says

It's not easy being green on a film set, says Colin Firth.

"It's a wasteful place," admits the Oscar-nominated actor.

"It is not ... because film people are free of conscience and they don't care about the planet. It's a very panic-stricken environment a lot of the time."

Firth says there are people in the film industry who will do anything to get a take on time.

"You get directors who say, 'Make the kid cry, get the scene right,'" he says with a laugh. "Things get wasted, thrown away, replaced. Whole sets go to landfill. Food gets laid out for the banquet scene and sprayed so it looks good but you can't touch it or eat it.

"The waste (even) to people who have no environmental conscience at all is pretty staggering to witness."

Firth was in Toronto over the weekend to accept an award, with his brother-in-law, for his support of the environment.

They received the inaugural International Entertainment Award from the Green Living/Environmental Media Association at the Green Living show, attracting a large crowd of environmental enthusiasts and Firth fans.

The Environmental Media Association is trying to mobilize the entertainment industry to educate people about environmental issues and inspire them to take action.

The association invented the concept of the "green carpet," the idea of taking a hybrid or alternative fuel vehicle, not a limo, to high-profile awards events.

Firth, his wife Livia, and her brother Nicola Giuggioli co-founded Eco Age in 2007, a London-based store that sells environmentally sensible products and offers consulting support to businesses on how to operate in a green way.

Accompanied by his famous brother-in-law, Giuggioli said in an interview that one of his goals is to show others that it is possible to run both a financially and environmentally sound business.

"You can do it and actually it is going to work pretty well," said Giuggioli, who was 25 when he began his business.

The concept is to go beyond green products.

"People should come to my shop to buy good things. The whole ethos behind the thing was to make things desirable," he says.

Many winemakers are growing their grapes using environmentally responsible methods.

Eco wines catching on

Wine can make people think of a lot of different things, especially good food, good friends and good times. Increasingly you can add another good to the list — good environmental stewardship.

Organic wines, which avoid the use of pesticides in grapes and is produced with sustainable farming practices, is becoming a more frequent presence on Canadian liquor store shelves.

The environmentally conscious consumer does not have to make a sacrifice to drink green wine. According to Hillary Dawson, president of the Wine Council of Ontario, there is no difference in taste or quality between organic and non-organic product.

Although there has been an increase in demand for organic products from consumers, Dawson says the decision to go organic goes much deeper than a business one. "It's not a need, it's a want," Dawson says. "Growing grapes requires a real deep connection to the soil."

The amount of green product available to the consumer might be even greater than it appears, according to Dawson. Although many producers use organic techniques to make their wine, Dawson says that the certification process to be recognized as an organic is "onerous." As a result, a lot of farmers don't bother.

However, one winemaker that has gone through the process of organic certification says that it is important to do so.

Bruce Ewert is the proprietor of L'Acadie winery in Nova Scotia. He says that there is only one way that consumers can be sure that they are getting an organic product — look on the label for certification.

"With marketing you can say anything," Ewert says. "When you put it on the label you know that a third party has been involved. It gives it credibility."

Email trouble for Goldman

Trader rushed to bet against mortgage market, message shows

As the U.S. housing market turned downward in January 2007, a Goldman Sachs trader wrote in emails to a woman he apparently was courting that investments he had sold were "like Frankenstein turning against his own inventor."

"I'm trading a product which a month ago was worth $100 US and today is only worth $93," wrote Fabrice Tourre, who was charged along with the bank in a civil complaint filed this month by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. "That doesn't seem like a lot, but when you take into account ... (the investments) are worth billions, well it adds up to a lot of money."

Tourre was talking about investment products like the one at the heart of a federal complaint against his firm. For Tourre, the investments were like an invention gone awry: He had started arranging them when the market was on the upswing. But he continued selling them after the market turned — now with Goldman betting against them, in one case allegedly misleading investors about a deal's origin.

Goldman Sachs Group Inc. released that email and 25 other internal documents Saturday in response to a U.S. Senate panel's release of messages in which Goldman executives boast about money they were making as the market imploded later in 2007.

When credit rating agencies downgraded many billions of dollars of mortgage-backed investments in October 2007, Goldman executive Donald Mullen was unabashedly pleased.

"Sounds like we will make serious money," Mullen wrote to Michael Swenson, another executive, in one of the emails released by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Goldman has argued vehemently it did not profit from the mortgage meltdown. Swenson and Tourre, along with Goldman CEO Lloyd Blankfein, will face a public grilling on Capitol Hill tomorrow from the subcommittee.

A colourful way to make a living

OddJobs

Diane Peters

Metronews.ca/oddjobs

When most of us see Michelle Obama in a yellow dress or watch the blue-green world of Avatar, we think: that looks cool.

Alice Chu sees next season's popular colours.

Chu was good at art as a child and worked hard to get better so she could attend university. She was born in Shanghai and moved to Taiwan with her grandparents to escape communism; getting into school was very competitive. By the time she'd finished her degree, both her grandparents had passed away. With nothing to keep her in Asia, she went to Columbia University in New York for a masters in art. But being a fine artist wasn't for her. "I thought to myself: 'If I just paint, it's not a career that can provide me with a job and money.'"

A summer job at a graphic design firm solved that problem. After she met her husband, she moved with him to Boston, then to Montreal after he got a job at McGill University. Since graphic design work was often sporadic, she decided to do her teaching diploma at McGill in 1972. She began teaching in the visual arts department at Dawson's College. Then a job posting at Ryerson in 1977 caught her eye. She moved to Toronto, seeing her husband every two weeks and during the summers.

As the years passed, Chu became increasingly interested in fashion, and in particular, colour. She observed how strong coloured, fashion-forward garments pull people into stores, but they often purchase conservatively hued pieces. She wondered about favourite colours: do people like certain colours because they're appealing, or because they look good in them.

Chu began writing about these issues and discussing them with her students. In the late 1980s, she joined Color Marketing Group. This U.S.-based non-profit has members from a range of industries, including interior design, that meet twice a year to discuss which colours are popular and to guess what will be hot in upcoming seasons.

It then publishes the group's predictions. Fabric manufacturers and paint companies then use these colour predictions to help formulate new products.

To develop her own theories of what's the next hot colour, Chu's always observing what's going on in pop culture, politics, the economy and big events. She's always looking at fashion magazines and what people are wearing when she travels.

Diane Peters once hawked magic pens at the Canadian National Exhibition. She's now a writer and part-time journalism instructor.

Eddie Izzard exposed

British stand-up comedian brings Stripped tour to Canada

KEITH CARMAN
for Metro Canada

In his high-heels, lipstick and earrings, there's no mistaking Eddie Izzard.

Yes, the 42-year-old British stand-up comedian is a transvestite, an issue he's addressed many times during various performances. Discerning between types of cross-dressers ("weirdo" versus "executive") and asserting that many men in women's clothing are in fact heterosexual, after 20 years as a comic, film and television star, Izzard is well beyond justifying his looks.

Not that it matters anyway. Slick, self-assured and quite intellectual, as Izzard delves into his shows, the initially shocking visual aspect quickly evaporates as one becomes enraptured in his alluring ability to regale with engaging tales steeped in history and hilarity.

"I always say I talk about everything there ever was ... with gaps," he smiles, referring to his penchant for relaying factual situations with a humorous twist. "(Comics) have to talk about something and if you have no point of view on anything, you end up doing dick jokes or mother-in-law jokes which is incredibly boring. You have the pressure of talking about something but if you can articulate a point of view, you can talk about absolutely anything. I discovered history which was waiting to be used."

Taking that modus to its extreme on his latest tour dubbed Stripped, Izzard reveals plans to discuss everything from God — or the lack thereof — to old people dying in their beds, Greeks and Romans, Egyptians, cavemen and more. He notes that the show is yet another wealth of information delivered with sincerity, brevity and most importantly, humor.

"I saw a professor lecture on a subject that I'm interested in and it was incredibly boring. There was too much detail and it was monotone. I break it down: 'There were these people and they were f—ed up.

British stand-up comedian and noted transvestite, Eddie Izzard.

Then these people came along and they were really f—ed up.' I cut it down and make it more street-accessible. Hopefully I'm not offering lessons so much as observations, though."

Still, as any devout Izzard fan knows, despite a general outline, there's always the potential for Stripped to careen off the rails nightly. Continually succumbing to his own tangents and affection for improvisation, Izzard often becomes so caught up in entertaining unscripted tales he becomes lost. "Where was I?" is as much a fixture of Eddie Izzard shows as his shocking appearance. At that, Izzard reveals that even with a host of items to discuss on Stripped's Canadian stint, he can't be sure exactly where it will go.

"Anyone gets bored with doing the same thing over and over again so I ad-lib as much as I can in every show (but) this show is well up to speed. I've performed in about 40 or 50 arenas so far, so Canada's getting it when it's in good shape ... I'm ready to talk more rubbish."

lar cancer.

"I've always had big ideas and been kind of out there," said Thomas Cantley, who got the diagnosis last year that would make most men cringe.

"Everyone's always told me I was ballsy even before I got this," he said following recent surgeries to remove his left testicle and several lymph nodes.

Cantley, who now calls New York City home, plans to create a documentary called Ballsy out of his travels, interviewing health care professionals and cancer survivors along the way.

"I'm 27. I never even had a cavity. I've always been healthy, then I'm told I have testicular cancer," he said. "It didn't really even hit me at first."

Cantley said he'd been in pain for months before he decided to seek medical help last fall.

Planning is underway as

Cantley seeks corporate sponsors, works out his travel itinerary and logistical support and awaits the arrival of his eight-kilogram, giant white ball from the manufacturer in Italy.

Michaels hospitalized

Poison frontman suffers brain hemorrhage

Bret Michaels is in critical condition suffering from a brain hemorrhage, his publicist said Friday.

Joann Mignano confirmed a report on People magazine's website Friday that said the former Poison frontman was rushed to intensive care late Thursday after a severe headache.

The report said doctors discovered bleeding at the base of his brain stem.

Mignano said tests are being conducted and that no further information was available.

The 47-year-old reality TV star had an emergency appendectomy last week after complaining of stomach pains.

He said on his website that although the surgery "has taken its toll," doctors expected him to make a full recovery.

Michaels starred on the VH1 dating show Rock of Love and is a contestant on Donald Trump's NBC reality show, The Celebrity Apprentice.

Trump said in a statement Friday that he was "deeply saddened" to hear of Michaels' condition.

"He's a great competitor and champion, and I hope he will be fine," Trump said.

Metro Recipe of the Day

Broiled Shad with Mushrooms

INGREDIENTS:

700 g fresh (or frozen and thawed) shad, sole, or flounder fillets
1 tbsp butter or margarine, melted
1 tbsp lemon juice
1 tbsp finely chopped yellow onion
1 tbsp drained prepared horseradish
1 tbsp Dijon mustard
1/4 tsp salt
1/8 tsp black pepper
1 tbsp butter or margarine
2 cups sliced fresh mushrooms

METHOD:

1. Preheat broiler. Rinse fish and pat dry. In small bowl, stir together 1 tbsp melted butter, lemon juice, onion, horseradish, Dijon mustard, salt, and pepper.

2. Place fish on lightly-greased broiler pan rack. Tuck under thin edges of fillets. Brush with lemon mixture. Broil 5 inches from heat 3 to 6 minutes or until fish flakes when tested with fork, brushing once with lemon mixture.

3. Meanwhile, in medium-size skillet, melt 1 tbsp butter over moderate heat. Add mushrooms and cook 3 minutes or until tender. Serve mushrooms on top of fish.

ARIES MARCH 21-APRIL 20

You may be inclined to fear the worst but you are also intelligent enough to know that it's pointless worrying about things you cannot control.

LIBRA SEPT 23-OCT 23

Routine matters are easy to ignore but can be difficult to put right if you let things slide too far. Take advantage of today's work-related influences.

TAURUS APRIL 21-MAY 21

It can be a mistake to try too hard to get along with people, not least because the more you try to please them the harder they are to please.

SCORPIO OCT 24-NOV 22

The week ahead will be highly productive for those born under the sign of the scorpion, but you still need to pace yourself sensibly.

GEMINI MAY 22-JUNE 21

Something you have been working towards for many months will begin to bear fruit this week, making you glad you stayed the distance.

SAGITTARIUS NOV 23-DEC 21

There may be something of a personal nature that you want to be getting on with but if others demand your attention you will have to put them first.

CANCER JUNE 22-JULY 22

You can handle anything that life throws at you. Yes, anything. It does not matter how tough the test you face today you will come through.

CAPRICORN DEC 22-JAN 20

At some stage today you will be struck by a wonderful idea and you must make a detailed note of it right away.

LEO JULY 23-AUG 23

You may feel obliged to commit yourself in some way, either to a family member or to a friend, but you really don't have to.

AQUARIUS JAN 21-FEB 18

Will things get better in your life? Of course they will, starting from this very day, this very minute and this very moment.

VIRGO AUG 24-SEPT 22

Keep a sense of perspective over the next 24 hours. You will see that a relationship won't collapse just because you have had a minor disagreement.

PISCES FEB 19-MARCH 20

Focus your energy in a single direction and don't let anyone distract you from what you know you should be doing.
